

Mannix

"Content" is defined by either the user performing a search on the Internet or by the Channels that 3COM establishes with third parties, etc... The difference is that the former is less structured - the user defines the content, whereas the latter the content is already formatted for them and they choose which content to read. As the user browses either area, Mannix registers their habits and begins to personalize.

Out of the box, Mannix comes with a "Planner and Scheduler", a "Scrapbook" and a "Financial Planner". It is through time and repeated interaction with Mannix that these 3 features become more robust and personalized. The hope is that as time goes on, the interaction between the content and the three "Applications" becomes more seamless. This is what sets Mannix apart from other products.

It is through the Enhanced Communication that the users are going to be able to share their information with others - to share the benefits of Mannix with others. The "double arrows" signifies that this represents the main avenue for the user to interact with other users and then apply what they have "learned" or "received" back to their Personal Assistant".
